Written by Michael Frayn, Copenhagen is a two-act play based on a real-life meeting between physicists Niels Bohr and Werner Heisenberg in 1941. Although based on real events, the play is nonlinear, as its three characters (Bohr, Heisenberg, and Bohr's wife Margrethe) reunite after death to relive and better understand that fateful meeting.

Copenhagen Summary and Study Guide | SuperSummary

Copenhagen brings to life questions of history, science, friendship and morality as it seelessly twists together dramatic dialogue and scientific explanations to the point that the science is the dialogue. How it does this and still avoid becoming esoteric and stilted I can't explain, but it does.

In any case the play returns to the persecution of Jews in Nazi Germany again and again, from the suppression of so-called "Jewish physics" (relativity) to the enforced flight of all the Jewish physicists, the death of Samuel Goudsmit's parents in Auschwitz, and the attempt by the SS to deport the Jewish population of Denmark to the death camps, which Margrethe Bohr describes as "that great darkness inside the human soul" flooding out to engulf us all.
